GHOST PHOTOGRAPHED: PROOF OR FAKE?

1 Speculation over the presence of a ghost at Tantallon Castle in Scotland was aroused by a picture released as part of an experiment into the photographic evidence of the paranormal. The image, taken in May 2010, appeared to show a figure in medieval costume. The photographer 5 claimed that they were unaware of anyone present at the time the image was taken, and that there were no actors in costume at the castle.

Now another image which could show the same ghost has been presented to psychologist Richard Wiseman, who has been running the study. It was taken 30 years ago by Grace Lamb, during a family trip to 10 the castle. It is a picture of her husband and their children but in the background appears to be some kind of apparition. "I have been getting a picture of a ghost every ten minutes since I launched the study. Most of them are nonsense, but a few are interesting", Professor Wiseman said. Experts admit that these two images don't seem to have been digitally 15 altered. The face, however, may be just another visitor; and it was also suggested the image could have been caused by light reflection off the stone walls of the castle.

CABLE'S BIG FEAR: INTERNET TV

1 Force of habit is a powerful thing. How else can I explain why I spend $ 200 per month for a package of Internet, TV and telephone –most of which I don't really need? My wife and I make most calls on our cell phones. An even bigger waste of money is TV, which accounts for $125 of
5 the $200 package. Nearly everything we want we could get online. So why not just pay for the Internet and forget the rest?

Nielsen recently reported that although online video viewing has risen TV viewing is still done on a traditional TV. But that's not the case for younger people, like my pal Dan Frommer. He gets shows from the 10 Internet via a Macintosh computer hooked to his LCD television. He can't get everything he'd like to see. The next generation will likely never sign up for cable TV at all.

Cable companies are faced with a dilemma: do they embrace the Internet and try to make money online, or do they fight the Internet and try 15 to hold off the destruction? The answer is to do both –holding off the rising tide with one hand while racing to devise workable Internet business models with the other.
