Option 1

How Amazon Became a Pandemic Giant

For the last year, Anna has been working for Amazon. For £10.50 an hour, she works four days a week, though during busy periods, this sometimes goes up to five. Her shift begins at 7.15am and ends at 5.45pm. "When I get home," she says, "I just go in, shower and go to bed. I'm always exhausted." Anna is a picker in one of the company's most technologically advanced workplaces. This means she works in a metal enclosure in front of a screen that flashes up images of the products she has to put into special bags to make customer orders ready for posting.

Everything from DVDs to gardening equipment is brought to her by robotic devices so that she can complete the order and pass it on. Everything happens quickly. To keep up with company standards, Anna has to average 360 items an hour, or around 3,800 a day. This translates as one item every 6.7 seconds. In March, the Covid-19 lockdown meant that customer orders suddenly rocketed. Anna says that lots of her colleagues started putting in overtime, and new recruits arrived en masse. "They hired a lot of people," she says. "I thought there should have been fewer people in the warehouse, to have distancing."

Only in April did masks become mandatory. "The first month," she says, "I was asking for antibacterial gel and other basic things." Anna still has a problem with how regularly masks can be changed. "You can only get one when you're starting your shift. You know the basic blue mask? It should be changed, I don't know, every few hours. But people have to work with the same one the whole day." Anna says some staff are now employed to monitor distancing in the warehouse and ensure that nowhere becomes overcrowded. Before the Covid-19 crisis, Amazon was already a vast presence in the economy and its customers' lives, but now its reach and size is almost beyond comprehension. At the end of July, the company announced that it had doubled its quarterly profits to $5.2 billion, compared with $2.6 billion at the same point in 2019. Net sales had risen by 40%. "This was another highly unusual quarter, and I couldn't be more proud of and grateful to our employees around the globe," said Jeff Bezos, the man who founded Amazon in Seattle and owns 11% of its shares.

Pompeii Excavation Reveals 'Almost Perfect' Remains of a Master and his Slave

The almost perfectly preserved remains of two men have been unearthed in an extraordinary discovery in the ancient Roman city of Pompeii. The victims are believed to have died as they were fleeing the catastrophic eruption of Mount Vesuvius in the year 79 AD, and the remains were found during excavations at a villa on the outskirts of the city. Massimo Osanna, Pompeii Archaeological Park's director, said yesterday that the find was "truly exceptional", while culture minister Dario Franceschini said it underlined the importance of Pompeii as a place for study and research.

The two men, lying close together, are believed to have escaped the initial phase of the eruption when the city was blanketed in volcanic ash and pumice, only to then be killed by a blast that happened the following day. Their remains were discovered in the same location where a stable containing the remains of three harnessed horses were unearthed in 2017. Experts said the younger man, who was probably aged between 18 and 25, had several compressed vertebrae, which led them to believe that he was a manual labourer or slave. He is thought to have been wearing a pleated tunic, possibly made of wool. The elder man, aged between 30 and 40, had a stronger bone structure, particularly around his chest area, and was wearing a tunic which was more typical of a master.

Park officials said that further digging over the coming months might reveal where the men were heading and determine the roles they played in the elegant villa. It is the latest in a series of fascinating discoveries that excavations at Pompeii have yielded in recent years. For instance, the bodies of two women and three children were discovered huddled together in the room of a villa in the Regio V area in October 2018. A week before, the same villa revealed a charcoal inscription that suggested Vesuvius erupted in October 79 AD, and not in August of that year as previously thought.

The latest dig, part of a €1m project, is continuing despite the coronavirus pandemic. The park, which is currently closed to tourists, usually attracts four million people a year. The Pompeii ruins were first discovered in the 16th century, with excavations beginning in 1748. Over 1,500 of the estimated 2,000 victims have been found over the centuries.

AD- Anno Domini, which is used in English to refer to "After the birth of Christ"

Question 1 [2 POINTS] Indicate whether the following statements are TRUE or FALSE and write down the sentence or the part of the text that justifies your answer. No points will be given if the evidence is not correct.

a) The remains of the two men were found in the city centre.

FALSE "the remains were found during excavations at a villa on the outskirts of the city."

b) The men are thought to have died during the very first part of the disaster.

FALSE "The two men, lying close together, are believed to have escaped the initial phase of the eruption"

OR...

"only to then be killed by a blast that happened the following day"

c) The charcoal inscription was discovered before the remains of the women and children.

TRUE "A week before, the same villa revealed a charcoal inscription"

d) The coronavirus pandemic has not stopped the most recent excavation.

TRUE "The latest dig, part of a €1m project, is continuing despite the coronavirus pandemic."

Question 2 [2 POINTS] Choose and answer only TWO of the following questions in your own words according to the text.

a) What different things does the text tell us about the two men recently found in Pompeii?

- Their age.
- Their possible social class.
- Where and when they died.
- Some physical characteristics.
- The clothes they were wearing.

b) What different specific discoveries other than the two men are mentioned in the text?

- A stable with three horses in 2017.
- A small group of women and children in 2018
- A charcoal inscription in 2018.
- In general, remains of three quarters of the victims have been recovered.

c) What does the text tell us about the eruption of the Vesuvius?

- When it happened, although new findings suggest it was in October 79 AD and not August.
- That it covered the city of Pompeii in volcanic ash and pumice.
- It happened in different stages.
- It killed an estimated 2000 people.

Question 3 [1.5 POINTS] Find words or phrases in the text that correspond to the words given. You only need to have five correct answers to get 1.5 points.
